Overview

I hope that none of your old professors ever join EnglishTVLive and see this challenge ;) Great work Victoria, you expressed yourself clearly in this challenge, and it was easy to follow your train of thought. Happy to hear that you at least had a few good professors to balance out the dull and boring ones. I've written down a few notes for you below. Hope this helps!

Corrections

You said...	It's better to say...
Lost somebody's train of thought.	We usually lose our own train of thought in English! I would rather say, "There were a few times in college when I couldn't follow others' trains of thought."
It doesn't hook you up (you were speaking about your boring professors here ;) )	They couldn't hook me (in) with their style of teaching. There are a number of ways to say this without using hooked, too. To hook someone = to capture their attention, which is what your professors failed to do. To hook someone up with something is kind of an informal way of describing favors. "My boss hooked me up with some hockey tickets, so I'm going to the game tonight." (My boss kindly gave me some hockey tickets...)
They didn't have the logic of their answer.	You could also use follow here: It was difficult to follow the logic of their explanations (or arguments, or presentations, etc.)

New Vocabulary Suggestions

Vocabulary and Phrases	Meaning
Engaged (about one's level of interest)	To be engaged can mean a number of different things in English. In this context, you could say that some of your professors (the good ones) were able to keep you engaged throughout their lectures. (Basically, they were able to hold your attention and keep you interested).
